Cap Karoso Indonesia

Evguenia and Fabrice Ivra left their life in Paris behind to open a hotel on the Indonesian island of Sumba. Here they tell us more about the Cap Karoso, a 47-room and 20-villa project opening in spring 2022. — NMI

Why Sumba?

Fabrice: We were looking for a place with a nice culture and beautiful beaches but still quite accessible. We were heading to Bali but fell in love with Sumba.

Evguenia: It has a culture that you have to cross the world to experience. You can find nice beaches in Corsica or Greece but curiosity is a reason to cross the world. And in that sense Sumba is the perfect destination.

How does Cap Karoso embrace sustainability?

Fabrice: We have louvres on all our windows, an organic roof to decrease electricity consumption, a water treatment system and solar panels. And we'll grow 90 per cent of our food on our farm.

How would you define luxury?

Evguenia: To me it's about the effort put into everything, from object to experience. It's putting in that thought and time to create something that leaves a mark for life.

Coco Hotel Place

Restaurant group Copenhagen Food Collective (Cofoco) has stepped in to fill a gap by opening a new hotel. Located in buzzing Vesterbro, its 88 well-appointed rooms have artwork, custom furniture and woodwork made by Danish artisans. There's an inviting café with fresh pastries and organic coffee, and a courtyard where guests tuck in to light meals or pick from an organic wine and cocktail list. "The property is best described as a small Parisian-style hotel with a Copenhagen sense of space and time," says Cofoco CEO Christian Lytje. The hotel has stayed true to the group's sustainable message – all the electricity is generated from green sources and by Cofoco's very own solar field. — sz coco-hotel.com

Mama Roma Rome

At Mama Roma, guests can expect all the amenities and services the Paris-based Mama Shelter group has become famous for, such as a vast selection of films, "including adult only". The cheeky irreverence and playful details of every one of the 217 rooms housed on a workaday street in Prati should work well. — DMP mamashelter.com/roma
